the ruling, with annual licensing fees of $500. Should this happen, we would expect a court challenge that the fees are not reasonable and are a thinly veiled attempt at prohibiting firearm ownership in violation of the Supreme Court ruling. NRA's Wayne LaPierre and Chris Cox issued a statement which reads, in part:

“Today marks a great moment in American history. This is a landmark decision. It is a vindication for the great majority of American citizens who have always believed the Second Amendment was an individual right and freedom worth defending.

“The Supreme Court said what a majority of the American public believes. The people who wrote the Second Amendment said it was an individual right, and the Court has now confirmed what our founding fathers wrote and intended. The Second Amendment - as every citizen's constitutional right - is now a real part of American Constitutional law.”
